- First, under federal immigration law, only a federally-authorized ICE agent is permitted to execute an administrative ICE warrant. State and local officials operating outside of a § 287(g) agreement have no such authority.
- Second, the underlying infraction for which the warrants are issued—being in the country illegally— is typically a civil infraction, which cannot justify a State-law arrest.

City of Chicago has argued:

> Section 1373 itself is unconstitutional. The statute impermissibly "requir[es] [state and local officers] to provide information that belongs to [Chicago] and is available to them only in their official capacity." This is classically improper federal intrusion in local matters."

> Moreover, the Second Circuit dismissed concerns that § 1373 might require affirmative conduct by states and cities, and analyzed the statute solely as a negative restriction. [ ] But mandated action and inaction cannot be so neatly distinguished for § 1373. Cf. Alton R. Co. v. United States, 287 U.S. 229, 235 (1932) (order "negative in form" was "in effect, an affirmative one."). The provision was deliberately tailored to induce local officials to share sensitive information with the federal government. See S. Rep. No. 104-249, at 19-20 (1996) (seeking "a cooperative effort" to enforce federal immigration law through "[t]he acquisition, maintenance, and exchange of immigration-related information by State and local agencies")."

> And DOJ itself has pressed an especially aggressive (though mistaken) view of the actions that § 1373 that requires. As early as October 2016, DOJ suggested that localities must affirmatively instruct employees that they could freely communicate with federal officials. RJN Ex. O at 1 ("Your personnel must be informed … federal law does not allow any government entity or official to prohibit" sharing status information with federal officials). And in explaining recently why Miami's § 1373 certification passed muster, the AG pointed to Miami's decision to cooperate with ICE detainer requests, see RJN II, Ex. A, further implying his belief that § 1373 requires affirmative cooperation. The Constitution forbids commandeering City law enforcement in this way.

> The AG relies on City of New York v. United States, 179 F.3d 29 (2d Cir. 1999). But that decision departs from the commandeering analysis that is required in this Circuit. As the Seventh Circuit has instructed, "[w]hen the national government conscripts the legislative or executive arms of a state, the law violates a structural immunity and 'a "balancing" analysis is inappropriate.'" Travis v. Reno, 163 F.3d 1000, 1003 (7th Cir. 1998). The decision in New York, however, relies on precisely that kind of balancing. There, the Second Circuit considered the degree to which § 1373 intruded on "integral" operations of city government, and concluded that it barely did—all while suggesting that if the conflicting city law played a more prominent role, the analysis might have turned out differently. New York, 179 F.3d at 37. That analysis is foreclosed by Travis and cannot control here."

FEDERAL IMMIGRATION ENFORCEMENT

Sec. 287(g) Agreements

- Can perform the same functions performed by federal immigration agents:
  - Access to federal immigration databases,
  - Interrogate and take non-citizens into custody, and
  - Lodge “detainers” against alleged non-citizens held in state or local custody.

FEDERAL IMMIGRATION ENFORCEMENT

Sec. 287(g) Agreements

- A local law enforcement officer deputized under such an agreement functions as a federal officer and is treated as such for purposes of the Federal Tort Claims Act and worker's compensation claims when performing functions under the agreement. In addition, authorized local personnel enjoy the same defenses and immunities from personal liability for their in-scope acts that are available to ICE officers, and may request—but are not entitled to—representation by the Department of Justice in any litigation arising from activities carried out under the agreement.
