In the end, even a powerful counter-narrative alone won't ensure a District victory in Koontz. Nevertheless, such a counter-narrative remains a necessary predicate for a favorable ruling in any closely contested takings case – particularly when a government agency faces a conservative court (like the Roberts Court), a sympathetic plaintiff (like Coy Koontz), and talented property rights advocates (like the lawyers at the Pacific Legal Foundation).