Municipal Codes Online - Folder is empty. Here's why:

After much experimentation I decided against trying to add links for each online muncipal code. The leading code publishers & links to the codes that they publish, are in the Online Legal Research links folder. However a Google or other robust search engine query for "[name of city] city code" will yield the result more quickly than scrolling through links names, and will be more likely to yield the most current code version. There is a good argument that links lists are becoming outdated as search engines improve. But I've not quite fully bought into that yet. Pete Haskel

BYU Online Corpora - Analyzes how words are used

Self-Described: "These corpora were created by Mark Davies, Professor of Linguistics at Brigham Young University. They are used by more than 80,000 people each month (more than 200,000 visits), which makes them perhaps the most widely-used corpora currently available. They also serve as the basis for an increasing number of publications by researchers from throughout the world. The corpora have many different uses, including: finding out how native speakers actually speak and write; looking at language variation and change; finding the frequency of words, phrases, and collocates; and designing authentic language teaching materials and resources." For query options, see CORPORA: 45-425 million words each: free online access, http://corpus.byu.edu/queries.asp (last visited Oct. 4, 2011). Pete Haskel.

Federal Register online from FRO & GPO (links to blog, search & RSS and email subscriptions, etc.) Self-Described: "The Office of the Federal Register (OFR) of the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA), and the U.S. Government Printing Office (GPO) jointly administer the FederalRegister.gov website. The OFR/GPO partnership developed this unofficial, HTML (XML-based) edition of the daily Federal Register (•gFederal Register 2.0•• or FR2). In the HTML edition, Federal Register documents are organized and displayed in an easier to read format; we have also added various web tools and user aids designed to help people find material relevant to their interests. We built the HTML edition of the Federal Register to make it easier for citizens and communities to understand the regulatory process and to participate in Government decision-making."

IRS Exempt Organization Search Tool

Self-Described: "Users can now go to one location on IRS.gov, select a tax-exempt organization, and check if the organization: * Is eligible to receive tax-deductible charitable contributions (Publication 78 data, which is incorporated here). Users may rely on this list in determining deductibility of contributions (just as they did when Publication 78 was a separate electronic publication rather than part of EO Select Check). * Has had its federal tax exemption automatically revoked under the law for not filing a Form 990-series return or notice for three consecutive years (known as the Auto-Revocation List). * Has filed a Form 990-N (e-Postcard) annual electronic notice. (Most small organizations whose annual gross receipts are normally $50,000 or less are required to electronically submit Form 990-N, unless they choose instead to file a completed Form 990 or Form 990-EZ.) "EO Select Check also offers improved search functions. For example, users can now look for organizations eligible to receive deductible contributions by Employer Identification Number (EIN), which was previously not a searchable or sortable field in the electronic Publication 78. And data about organizations eligible to receive deductible contributions are now updated monthly, rather than quarterly. "In addition, organizations that have automatically lost their tax exemptions may now be searched by EIN, name, city, state, ZIP Code, country, exemption type, and revocation posting date, rather than only by state. EO Select Check also provides new pop-up help text to assist users in understanding the significance of auto-revocation search results, including the meaning of, and distinctions between, revocation dates and revocation posting dates."

Introduction to Basic Legal Citation - Peter M. Martin (Free online version from Cornell Law School's LII Web site)
Self-Described: "his work first appeared in 1993. It was most recently revised in the fall of 2010 to reflect the changes appearing in the fourth edition of the ALWD Citation Manual and the nineteenth edition of The Bluebook, both published earlier in the year, as well as recent developments in law publishing and the citation rules of individual U.S. jurisdictions. Being online, this guide's further revision is not tied to a rigid publication cycle. Any user seeing a need for clarification, correction, or other improvement is encouraged to send the suggested change, with explanation, to peter-martin@lawschool.cornell.edu (Please include "Citation" in the subject line.) The content of this guide is also available for $20 in three different e-book formats: 1) a pdf version that can be printed out in whole or part and also used with point-and-click navigation on any computer; 2) a version designed specifically for use on the Kindle and other readers or apps using the Mobipocket format; and 3) a version in ePub format for the Nook and other readers or apps that work with it."

JOLT - Journal of Law & Technology
University of Richmond Law School
http://jolt.richmond.edu/

Journal of Business & Technology Law (Univ. of Md., Francis King Carey School of Law)
As of 4/13/2012, articles were online as PDF files free via links from Web page for each issue. Self-Described: "ssues at the intersection of business and technology law are pervasive and increasingly complex. These issues present many challenging legal questions which have and will continue to provide ample opportunity for debate among legal scholars. As the first publication to examine these issues together, the Journal seeks to add an important voice to the nation’s legal scholarship and to provide a rewarding educational experience for our members. Launched in the fall of 2005, the Journal has provided a publication venue for the latest thinking on business and technology issues. With the help of its distinguished faculty advisers from the University of Maryland School of Law, the Journal is adding a vital voice to the nation's current legal scholarship. Each issue of the Journal is a rich collection of scholarly analysis on the latest developments in these areas. With articles and information from leaders in the business and legal communities, the Journal is an essential resource for members of the bench, the bar, and the academy. Most of the Journal's student writing analyzes leading decisions by the emerging business and technology courts nationwide. Almost twenty in number, these courts represent a burgeoning collection of states that are taking an innovative approach to judicial decision making. The judges on these courts are specially trained to evaluate business and technology matters, and the Journal will serve as the preeminent publication for analysis of their opinions. Together, our print and online formats constitute a unique resource for those who study, argue, or adjudicate business and technology disputes or have a stake in their outcomes."

Justia.com
Self-described: "Justia is a legal media and technology company focused on making legal information, resources and services easy to find on the Internet. We provide free case law, codes, regulations, legal articles and legal blog databases, as well as community resources. We use the Google Mini to index our Supreme Court database and other legal content sections of our website. The Google Mini's strength of results and ease of setup were important decision factors in choosing it as our search solution. Legal researchers who use our website to find information already know how to use Google.com so the Mini's familiar user interface and search relevance has greatly improved our user experience. And as a start-up, the Mini's reliability and low maintenance allowed us to use our engineering resources on other projects. With its reporting tools, the Google Mini has also given us greater insight into what our legal research users are searching for and are interested in. This has enabled us to build out sections of our website based on what our users want and has been a great help in allocating our resources during these initial phases of our portal development. The Google Mini has both saved us time and helped us focus, while providing our legal research users with the great Google search experience."

Local Government Case Law Newsletter from National Association of Bond Lawyers
Not at all limited to bond law topics. Self-Described: "This website database is provided free of charge by the National Association of Bond Lawyers as a public service and consists of case briefs published in Local Government Law Weekly, generally from the early 1990s on. Updates are posted monthly; and word search capability is by "Control f" and use of the "Find" feature at the top of the search result. Search topics do not include those involving municipal borrowing. Those are reserved to NABL members. NABL membership information appears elsewhere on this website. Some citations refer to temporary, non-existent volume and page numbers for cases not fully citable when briefed. Cases are only of reported decisions; and, other than for federal appellate opinions, cases have for some topics been selectively included. Cases briefed here may have been withdrawn, vacated, or reversed before publication in the official reports. It should not be assumed that we have not missed, mis-briefed, or mis-indexed cases; and we disclaim liability for errors or omissions. Copyright: Bond Case Briefs, Inc,

Reference Manual on Scientific Evidence (3d ed.) - for judges from National Academies Press. Link here accesses free versions

Link here accesses free PDF download and free online versions of the work, plus "Reference Tools" for using the online version, as well as link for ordering the printed version for $79.95. Self-Described: "The Reference Manual on Scientific Evidence, Third Edition assists judges in managing cases involving complex scientific and technical evidence by describing the basic tenets of key scientific fields from which legal evidence is typically derived and by providing examples of of cases in which that evidence has been used. First published in 1994 by the Federal Judicial Center, the Reference Manual on Scientific Evidence has been relied upon in the legal and academic communities and is often cited by various courts and others. Judges faced with disputes over the admissibility of scientific and technical evidence refer to the manual to help them better understand and evaluate the relevance, reliability and usefulness of the evidence being proffered. The manual is not intended to tell judges what is good science and what is not. Instead, it serves to help judges identify issues on which experts are likely to differ and to guide the inquiry of the court in seeking an informed resolution of the conflict. The core of the manual consists of a series of chapters (reference guides) on various scientific topics, each authored by an expert in that field. The topics have been chosen by an oversight committee because of their complexity and frequency in litigation. Each chapter is intended to provide a general overview of the topic in lay terms, identifying issues that will be useful to judges and others in the legal profession. They are written for a non-technical audience and are not intended as exhaustive presentations of the topic. Rather, the chapters seek to provide judges with the basic information in an area of science, to allow them to have an informed conversation with the experts and attorneys."

Social Security Death Index
Updated Weekly. Self-Described: "The Social Security Death Index (SSDI) is a database of people whose deaths were reported to the Social Security Administration (SSA) beginning about 1962. A small number of deaths are listed before 1962. It was created from the Social Security Administration's Death Master File. You will not find everyone who died from 1962 to the present, but it does list many deaths in that time frame, especially in more recent years (particularly from the late 1980s to the present). It is close to being a national death index for the United States. If you find someone listed in the Social Security Death Index you can usually order a copy of the form they filled out when they applied for a Social Security Card (SS-5 application) from the Social Security Administration for a fee. This record usually has more information about the person such as date and place of birth, and names of parents. However, names of parents may not always be released by the SSA. See restrictions on SS-5 forms below."

UCLA Law School - John & Hazel Darling Library LibGuides Links Page
UCLA Law Library's superb links to online research & other resources. Well worth a look! Wow! While many links are only live for registered students, etc., many are live. Catelogue is excellent even if you only get the citation rather than that work itself.

US S Ct Argument Audio - Thanks to Kory Nelson for reminding us of this resource 11/7/2011 Pete Haskel

Self-Described; "The audio recordings of all oral arguments heard by the Supreme Court of the United States is available to the public at the end of each argument week. The audio recordings are posted on Fridays after Conference. The public may either download the audio files or listen to the recordings on the Court's Web site. The audio recordings are listed by case name, docket number, and the date of oral argument. The Court began audio recording oral arguments in 1955. The recordings are maintained at The National Archives and Records Administration. Prior to the 2010 Term, the recordings from one Term of Court were not available until the beginning of the next Term. The Archives will continue to serve as the official repository for the Court's audio recordings."
